

Washington, DC – Last week, Harry Teague hosted students from Carlsbad High School in his Capitol Hill office. The students were visiting Washington with the National League of Cities as part of the League's 2010 Congressional Cities Conference. The conference allowed Carlsbad city officials and residents the opportunity to advocate for issues important to Carlsbad in Washington. This year's conference theme was job creation and economic recovery.

The group discussed the National League of Cities program, as well as Congressman Harry Teague's efforts to grow southern New Mexico's economy and job opportunities through programs like his Job Resources Fairs and the Energy Jobs for Veterans Act. Teague met with Roman Gonzalez, Zachary Hinojos and Austin Graham, all from Carlsbad High School.
